Origins in Tamil Literature

The motif of mother-son relationships is deeply ingrained in Tamil literature, dating back to classical texts such as the Sangam poetry (circa 300 BCE – 300 CE). Poems often depict the maternal figure as a symbol of nurturing, sacrifice, and unwavering love. For instance, in Sangam literature, the mother is frequently portrayed as the protector of her children, embodying virtues like patience and selflessness.

The Thirukkural, a revered Tamil text authored by Thiruvalluvar, also emphasizes virtues such as filial piety and reverence for parents, reinforcing the cultural importance of maternal affection and filial duties. These foundational texts set the stage for centuries of storytelling that highlight the sacred bond between mother and son.

Influence of Religious and Mythological Narratives

Tamil mythology and religious stories further deepen the narrative of maternal love and moral duty. The stories of goddess Parvati and her son Lord Ganesha are celebrated as paradigms of maternal devotion. Similarly, stories of Lord Rama and his mother Kausalya exemplify filial piety and duty, often illustrating moral dilemmas faced by characters.

These mythological stories serve as allegories, teaching societal values and ethical principles, and are frequently referenced in modern stories to evoke cultural resonance.
