marcy platinum: Sixes and Eights Jamel DuBois, 2019-10-09 Thou shalt not kill. Neither shalt thou steal. These rules to live by are violated in some degree in all the stories in this collection: "Bring Me the Head of Kathleen Sullivan" relates the murder of a prominent Texas citizen. "Dominoes," delicately positioned and when pressed into movement to nudge into the next one and that one into the next, results in a jumbled heap. In "Sad Songs," the narrator is a songwriter-guitar player marked by hard work and hard times; and betrayal and lost love. "The Taking of Kaitlyn Peck" is the case of a young girl abducted on the way from school to her upscale neighborhood home. "Storm Clouds and Blue Skies," one or the other, not both, mark the futures of these gypsy pilots. "Out of Focus." Click, click, goes the mind of a killer, detailing revenge for a long endured and lying slur. "A Day At the Zoo," certainly is no picnic, except for the man killers of a wildlife park in Africa.
