Overview of the Plot

H.G. Wells' The Invisible Man follows the story of Griffin, a scientist who discovers the secret to invisibility through his groundbreaking experiments. His discovery initially appears to promise limitless possibilities, but it quickly spirals into a nightmare as Griffin's obsession with his invention leads to tragic consequences. The story is set in a small English village and later moves to a broader landscape where Griffin's invisibility isolates him from society and fuels his descent into madness.

The novel begins with Griffin arriving at the village inn, seeking shelter after his experiments have gone awry. As the story unfolds, readers learn about Griffin's background, his obsession with scientific discovery, and his increasingly erratic behavior. His invisibility, initially a scientific marvel, becomes a curse that estranges him from humanity, leading to violence, paranoia, and social alienation. The narrative is told through multiple perspectives, including that of witnesses and victims, which adds depth and complexity to the storytelling.

Themes and Symbolism

Isolation and Alienation

One of the central themes of The Invisible Man is the profound sense of isolation experienced by Griffin. His invisibility, while granting him power, also renders him invisible to society and even himself, leading to a sense of loneliness and alienation. This theme reflects broader societal issues about the dangers of scientific hubris and the moral responsibilities that come with technological advancements.

Power and Corruption

Griffin's invisibility grants him immense power, which he initially views as a scientific breakthrough. However, as his power grows, so does his arrogance, leading to destructive behavior. The novel explores how the corrupting influence of power can lead individuals down a dark path, emphasizing that scientific discovery without ethical consideration can have catastrophic results.

Identity and Humanity

The novel raises questions about what it means to be human. Griffin's invisibility strips away his physical presence but also isolates his identity, making him a figure of both fascination and horror. The loss of physical form symbolizes a loss of moral compass and empathy, prompting readers to consider the importance of human connection and morality.

Symbolism of Invisibility

Invisibility in the novel is a powerful metaphor for societal marginalization, unchecked scientific ambition, and the fear of the unknown. It symbolizes how society perceives and treats those who are different or who challenge norms. Additionally, Griffin's invisibility reflects the idea that power often comes with invisibility—being unseen, unaccountable, and free to act without consequences.

Character Analysis

Griffin

As the protagonist and anti-hero of the story, Griffin is a complex character. His brilliance is undeniable, but his moral compass is questionable. His descent into madness highlights the dangers of obsession and the ethical dilemmas associated with scientific experimentation. His transformation from a curious scientist to a violent outcast serves as a warning about the potential consequences of unrestrained ambition.

Supporting Characters

- Mrs. Hall: The innkeeper who witnesses Griffin's unraveling and represents a moral anchor amid chaos.
- Cecil Griffin: Griffin's brother, who embodies a contrasting perspective on science and morality.
- The Doctor and Police: Their interactions with Griffin highlight society's inability to contain or understand such a powerful and unstable individual.

Writing Style and Literary Devices

H.G. Wells' writing style in The Invisible Man combines clear, engaging prose with a sense of immediacy that immerses readers into the story. His use of first-person narration from various characters provides multiple perspectives, adding layers of complexity and depth. The novel employs vivid descriptions, especially during the depiction of Griffin's experiments and moments of transformation, which heighten the sense of wonder and horror.

Wells effectively uses symbolism and allegory to reinforce themes, such as invisibility representing societal invisibility or marginalization. His storytelling balances scientific exposition with narrative suspense, making complex ideas accessible and compelling.

Originally serialized in Pearson's Weekly in 1897, it was published as a novel the same year. The Invisible Man of the title is Griffin, a scientist who has devoted himself to research into optics and invents a way to change a body's refractive index to that of air so that it neither absorbs nor reflects light and thus becomes invisible. He successfully carries out this procedure on himself, but fails in his attempt to reverse it. While its predecessors, The Time Machine and The Island of Doctor Moreau, were written using first-person narrators, Wells adopts a third-person objective point of view in The Invisible Man. A mysterious man, Griffin, arrives at the local inn of the English village of Iping, West Sussex, during a snowstorm. The stranger wears a long-sleeved, thick coat and gloves; his face is hidden entirely by bandages except for a fake pink nose; and he wears a wide-brimmed hat. He is excessively reclusive, irascible, and unfriendly. He demands to be left alone and spends most of his time in his rooms working with a set of chemicals and laboratory apparatus, only venturing out at night. While Griffin is staying at the inn, hundreds of strange glass bottles (that he calls his luggage) arrive. Many local townspeople believe this to be very strange. He becomes the talk of the village. Meanwhile, a mysterious burglary occurs in the village. Griffin is running out of money and is trying to find a way to pay for his board and lodging. When his landlady demands that he pay his bill and quit the premises, he reveals part of his invisibility to her in a fit of pique. An attempt to apprehend the stranger is frustrated when he undresses to take advantage of his invisibility, fights off his would-be captors, and flees to the downs. There Griffin coerces a tramp, Thomas Marvel, into becoming his assistant. With Marvel, he returns to the village to recover three notebooks that contain records of his experiments. When Marvel attempts to betray the Invisible Man to the police, Griffin chases him to the seaside town of Port Burdock, threatening to kill him. Marvel escapes to a local inn and is saved by the people at the inn, but Griffin escapes. Marvel later goes to the police and tells them of this invisible man, then requests to be locked up in a high-security jail. Griffin's furious attempt to avenge his betrayal leads to his being shot. He takes shelter in a nearby house that turns out to belong to Dr. Kemp, a former acquaintance from medical school. To Kemp, he reveals his true identity: the Invisible Man is Griffin, a former medical student who left medicine to devote himself to optics. Griffin recounts how he invented chemicals capable of rendering bodies invisible, and, on impulse, performed the procedure on himself. Griffin tells Kemp of the story of how he became invisible. He explains how he tried the invisibility on a cat, then himself. Griffin burned down the boarding house he was staying in, along with all the equipment he used to turn invisible, to cover his tracks; but he soon realised that he was ill-equipped to survive in the open. He attempted to steal food and clothes from a large department store, and eventually stole some clothing from a theatrical supply shop and headed to Iping to attempt to reverse the invisibility. Now he imagines that he can make Kemp his secret confederate, describing his plan to begin a Reign of Terror by using his invisibility to terrorise the nation.... the book the invisible man: The Invisible Man H. G. Wells, 2020-06-15 The Invisible Man: A Grotesque Romance begins on a wintry day in February. A mysterious, oddly dressed stranger arrives at the Coach and Horses pub in the town of Iping in rural Sussex. His entire body is covered. Even his face is swathed in a muffler, and his eyes are hidden behind dark glasses. Although the landlady and her husband, the Halls, are curious about his bizarre appearance, they readily agree to rent him a room because it is the off season. The next day, the stranger's luggage arrives, consisting of several crates of chemicals and books. Because of his furtive and solitary nature, the stranger quickly becomes the object of local gossip. Mrs. Hall, who believes he has been in a horrible disfiguring accident, soon perceives unbelievable things in her guest's eccentricities. It appears that he has no lower half to his jaw, for example, and as his brusqueness becomes more violent, she suspects that there is more to his behavior than can be explained by mere physical deformity. After he runs out of money, a rash of petty thefts in the village point to the strange lodger as the culprit. His invisibility finally is discovered when Mrs. Hall calls in Jaffers, the local constable, to evict him for not paying his bill. The village inhabitants panic. Naked and on the run, the invisible man coerces a tramp, Thomas Marvel, to aid him in his escape. Marvel retrieves three scientific notebooks from the Coach and Horses and steals money for the fugitive. As news of the invisible man spreads around the countryside, he makes his way to Port Stowe, where he finds refuge with an old university mate of his, Dr. Kemp. Kemp harbors his friend, who is revealed to be named Griffin, and is fascinated by the achievement of his former classmate. Kemp becomes alarmed, however, as Griffin describes in gruesome detail the scientific experiments he carried out to perfect his invisibility and how, in his single-minded pursuit of his discoveries, he stole money from his father, causing his bankruptcy and eventually his death, events for which he seems to feel little remorse. It is apparent that the process has unhinged Griffin's mind as well as transforming his body. As Griffin begins to rail about his newly found power over others and proposes a reign of terror to be visited by him on the general population in retaliation for the general neglect of his achievements, Kemp decides to turn him over to the authorities. Griffin, however, escapes once again and in a gratuitous act murders a man in broad daylight. Because of his betrayal, Kemp now becomes the object of Griffin's wrath. In cooperation with the police, he sets himself up as a decoy. The invisible man finally is cornered and killed by a smashing blow from a worker's spade. In death, he loses his invisibility and reappears. The novel ends with a strange epilogue. The tramp, Marvel, with the money he stole for Griffin, buys a pub, which he names The Invisible Man. He regales his customers with tales of his exploits. After hours, Marvel peruses Griffin's notebooks, which contain his scientific notes. Marvel has hidden these notebooks from the police and Dr. Kemp. In the solitude of his pub, he dreams of rediscovering the formula for invisibility and achieving the power and wealth he assumes that such a state would afford.

Wells' novel was originally serialised in Pearson's Magazine in 1897, and published as a novel the same year. The Invisible Man of the title is Griffin, a scientist who theorises that if a person's refractive index is changed to exactly that of air and his body does not absorb or reflect light, then he will be invisible. He successfully carries out this procedure on himself, but cannot become visible again, becoming mentally unstable as a result.
