what did you say what: What Did You Say "what" For? James Paul Dey, 1973 What did you say what for? has no real story or plot line, and a park bench is its only set. It simply involves a rather mad lady's attempts at conversation with a simple, unsuspecting little man. Beneath the bizarre dialogue and lunatic fun is indeed a level of human isolation crying out for a sounding board; to converse with something that reacts; to be heard and acknowledged, even though nothing in particular is communicated or understood. However, any attempt on the part of the director or actors to belabor these undercurrents or wallow in hidden meanings would do nothing but destroy them, as is the case in all absurdist drama.
