Background and Composition

Paradise Lost was composed between 1658 and 1664 and published in 1667. It was

Structure and Style

The poem is written in blank verse—unrhymed iambic pentameter—which allows for a grand, flowing narrative style suitable for epic poetry. The core narrative revolves around the temptation of Adam and Eve by Satan in the Garden of Eden. Milton explores their innocence, free will, and the consequences of disobedience. The fall results in humanity’s expulsion from paradise, but also sets the stage for themes of redemption.

Free Will and Predestination

Milton emphasizes human agency and the importance of free will. He argues that God’s justice allows humans to choose their paths, even if those choices lead to fall and suffering. This tension between predestination and free will is central to the poem’s theological reflection.

Redemption and Hope

Despite the tragic fall, Milton’s Christian worldview is optimistic about eventual redemption. The poem concludes with the promise of salvation through Jesus Christ, offering hope for humanity’s future.
