While concrete historical records are scarce, the earliest references point towards him as a legendary founder of the Northern Uí Néill.

His name, "Niall," likely derives from the Old Irish Niall, meaning "champion" or "cloud," emphasizing his regal stature. The epithet "the Nine Hostages" refers to a legendary event where Niall is said to have taken nine hostages from nine different Irish kingdoms—an act symbolizing conquest, dominance, and political consolidation. These hostages were often children or princes, held as assurance of loyalty and submission.

Main points of scholarly debate:
