These faiths describe angels as messengers of God—beings of light with an inherent purity that is often reflected through their serene and radiant faces. Early religious art, including frescoes, mosaics, and illuminated manuscripts, sought to portray these divine beings with features that convey both compassion and transcendence.

In Christian iconography, the face of the angel often symbolizes divine benevolence and heavenly authority. Artists aimed to capture an ethereal beauty that transcended earthly imperfections, emphasizing the spiritual nature of these celestial messengers.
