Historical Background

Origins and Development

Goldsmith was established in the late 18th century as a small but prosperous mining community. Its name is derived from the abundance of mineral deposits and the skilled artisans—particularly goldsmiths—who once worked there. The village boomed during the early 19th century, serving as a hub for local trade and craftsmanship.

Decline and Abandonment

By the late 19th century, economic shifts, resource depletion, and urban migration led to its gradual decline. The gold mines dried up, and younger generations moved to larger cities for better opportunities. By the early 20th century, Goldsmith had become a ghost town, with most structures left to decay amid the encroaching wilderness.
