1985 Pace Arrow Motorhome: A Comprehensive Review

The 1985 Pace Arrow motorhome stands as a notable example of mid-1980s recreational vehicle craftsmanship, blending innovative design, practical features, and robust performance to appeal to both seasoned RV enthusiasts and newcomers to the lifestyle. As a product of the highly regarded Fleetwood RV company, the 1985 Pace Arrow embodies the era's emphasis on comfort, durability, and versatility, making it an important chapter in the history of motorhome development. This article provides an in-depth exploration of the vehicle's design, engineering, features, performance, and legacy, offering readers a detailed understanding of what made the 1985 Pace Arrow a standout in its class.

Historical Context and Market Position

Recreational Vehicle Industry in the Mid-1980s

The mid-1980s marked a period of significant growth and innovation within the recreational vehicle industry. The economy was relatively stable, leading to increased leisure travel and a high demand for versatile, reliable motorhomes. Consumers sought vehicles that could serve as both transportation and home away from home, emphasizing comfort, storage, and ease of driving.

Fleetwood RV, one of the most prominent manufacturers during this era, responded by producing models that balanced luxury and practicality. The Pace Arrow, introduced in the late 1970s, had already established a reputation for quality and innovation. By 1985, the Pace Arrow had evolved into a refined, feature-rich model that catered to a wide range of travelers.

Positioning of the 1985 Pace Arrow

The 1985 Pace Arrow was positioned as a high-quality Class A motorhome, appealing to customers who desired a full-featured, stylish, and dependable RV. It competed with other premium models from manufacturers such as Winnebago, Monaco, and Holiday Rambler. Its blend of comfort, performance, and affordability made it a popular choice among both full-time and part-time RVers.

Design and Construction

Exterior Features and Aesthetics

The exterior of the 1985 Pace Arrow was characterized by its sleek, aerodynamic lines, which improved fuel efficiency and driving stability. Its size typically ranged from 30 to 35 feet in length, offering ample living space without being unwieldy on the road.

Key exterior features included:

- Fiberglass Body Shell: Enhancing durability and ease of maintenance.
- Large Windows: Providing natural light and scenic views.
- Slide-Out Sections: Some models incorporated slide-outs to increase interior space.
- Integrated Awning: For outdoor shade and comfort.
- Storage Compartments: Strategically placed for easy access and maximized capacity.

The paint schemes often featured bold stripes and color accents, aligning with the aesthetic trends of the era, emphasizing style and personalization.

Interior Layout and Design Philosophy

The interior of the 1985 Pace Arrow was designed with the traveler's comfort and convenience in mind. It reflected a home-like atmosphere, combining functionality with style.

Features included:

- Living Area: Usually featuring a sofa bed, chairs, and a dinette, arranged for social interaction.
- Kitchen: Equipped with a three-burner stove, oven, microwave, refrigerator, and ample cabinetry.
- Bathroom: Compact yet functional, with a shower, toilet, and sink.
- Sleeping Quarters: Master bedroom with a queen or double bed, and occasionally additional sleeping arrangements like convertible sofas.
- Storage Solutions: Overhead cabinets, wardrobe closets, and under-bed compartments for clothes, gear, and supplies.

Materials used often included wood veneer, plush upholstery, and modern (for the time) linoleum flooring, combining aesthetics with practicality.

Mechanical and Engineering Specifications

Chassis and Frame

The 1985 Pace Arrow was built on a robust chassis, often based on a Ford or Chevrolet heavy-duty truck frame. These chassis provided:

- Strength and Durability: Capable of supporting the weight of the fully equipped motorhome.
- Handling and Maneuverability: Designed for ease of driving despite its size.
- Customization Options: Some models offered optional upgrades to chassis components for enhanced performance.

Engine and Powertrain

The typical powertrain options for the 1985 Pace Arrow included:

- Ford 460 V8 Engine: Known for its torque and reliability, producing around 200-275 horsepower depending on specific configurations.
- Chevrolet 454 V8 Engine: An alternative offering with similar power and performance metrics.
- Transmission: Generally equipped with a 4- or 5-speed automatic transmission, facilitating smooth acceleration and hill-climbing.

The engines were designed to deliver a balance of power and fuel economy, critical for long-distance travel.

Driveability and Performance

The Pace Arrow's performance characteristics included:

- Top Speed: Typically around 55-60 mph comfortably, with good acceleration for highway merging.
- Fuel Economy: Averaged between 6-8 miles per gallon, a reasonable figure given its size and engine capacity.
- Handling: Despite its bulk, the vehicle maintained good stability, aided by features like sway bars and upgraded suspension components.

Systems and Safety Features

Safety features incorporated in the 1985 Pace Arrow included:

- Dual Rearview Mirrors: For better visibility.
- Brake Systems: Air brakes or hydraulic systems depending on the chassis.
- Lighting: Adequate headlights, turn signals, and reflective markings.
- Optional Safety Packages: Some models offered additional safety features like backup alarms and fire extinguishers.

Features and Amenities

Comfort and Convenience

The 1985 Pace Arrow was equipped with numerous amenities aimed at creating a comfortable living environment:

- Climate Control: Air conditioning units and heating systems capable of maintaining comfortable interior temperatures.
- Entertainment Systems: AM/FM radios, cassette players, and in some cases, early television setups.
- Lighting: Overhead LED or incandescent lighting with dimming options.
- Water and Waste Systems: Modern plumbing with fresh, grey, and black water tanks, along with water filtration features.

Additional Optional Features

Buyers could customize their Pace Arrow with options such as:

- Generator: For off-grid power supply.
- Satellite TV: Early satellite systems for entertainment.
- Upgraded Appliances: Microwave ovens, larger refrigerators, and premium audio systems.
- Luxury Upgrades: Leather upholstery, custom cabinetry, and high-end finishes.

Legacy and Impact

Consumer Reception and Market Impact

The 1985 Pace Arrow garnered positive reviews from owners and industry observers alike. Its reputation for reliability, combined with a comfortable and stylish interior, made it a favorite among RV enthusiasts. The model set a standard for mid-80s Class A motorhomes, influencing subsequent designs with its emphasis on comfort and practicality.

Collectibility and Restoration

Today, the 1985 Pace Arrow is considered a classic vintage RV. Many units have been restored or preserved by enthusiasts, appreciating its nostalgic value and engineering quality. Restorers often focus on maintaining original features, such as the interior cabinetry and engine components, to retain authenticity.

Legacy in RV Design

The 1985 Pace Arrow contributed to the evolution of motorhome design by emphasizing:

- Integrated Living and Driving Comfort: A trend that continues today.
- Customization Options: Offering a range of features and upgrades.
- Reliability and Durability: Setting benchmarks for future models.

Conclusion

The 1985 Pace Arrow motorhome remains a significant chapter in the history of recreational vehicles. It exemplifies the craftsmanship and innovation of its time, combining robust engineering with thoughtful design. For vintage RV collectors, enthusiasts, and travelers seeking a nostalgic yet functional vehicle, the Pace Arrow offers a compelling blend of style, comfort, and reliability. Its enduring legacy underscores its role as a pioneer in the evolution of the modern motorhome, and its influence continues to be felt in contemporary RV design and functionality.

Whether used for cross-country adventures or as a cherished collector's item, the 1985 Pace Arrow exemplifies the golden era of American RV manufacturing—a true icon of mobility and leisure.
