It seemed to her as if the flowers were growing up out of the inkstand, the gold glistened clearer and clearer, the knights moved past on stately horses, and the elves danced and sung in the moonshine. The aunt sat perfectly still and looked steadily at the inkstand and at the black mannikin as she listened to his wonderful narratives. Then a big dronefly came flying into the border of her night cap, and hung there in the lace and kicked and buzzed so that the aunt struck at it and rubbed her eyes. But the mannikin without being frightened at all, ducked down into the inkstand, the stopple fell back into its place and so all these splendors disappeared.
